

A Convict's Memoir With No Remorse

William Glaberson

March 7, 1999

Theodore J. Kaczynski, the convicted Unabomber, has written an unrepentant memoir that tries to settle scores and correct what he says is a distorted public image. The manuscript, sent to a New York publisher from the maximum security prison in Colorado where Mr. Kaczynski is serving a life sentence, does not admit that Mr. Kaczynski was the elusive bomber. But the book, to be published this spring, speaks of the Unabomber in admiring terms.

In passing, Mr. Kaczynski tries to justify the campaign that killed 3 people and injured at least 22 others. Some people like his brother David, he notes, claim that violence and the taking of human life is not the way to resolve problems. "As a matter of fact," Mr. Kaczynski writes, "history shows that it very often does work." David Kaczynski alerted Federal authorities to the possibility that his brother was the Unabomber.

WILLIAM GLABERSON

The Ted K Archive

William Glaberson
A Convict's Memoir With No Remorse
March 7, 1999

The New York Times, March 7, 1999, Section 4, Page 2. <www.nytimes.com/1999/03/07/weekinreview/feb-28-march-6-a-convict-s-memoir-with-no-remorse.html>

www.thetedkarchive.com